For more than 30 years, Tungasuvvingat Inuit has designed, developed and delivered highly effective, Inuit-specific services and programs in an effort to support and enhance the lives of Inuit. These successful endeavours are led with the guiding traditional principles of respect for Inuit culture, language, and diversity.

As part of that strategic plan, it is with great pleasure that Tungasuvvingat Inuit announces the addition of Joël Lamoureux as the new Communications Manager. Mr. Lamoureux joins the organization following many years of leadership with media companies across Canada and most recently, in roles as Director of Communications and Director of Operations at the Native Women's Association of Canada.

"I'm honoured to join the family at Tungasuvvingat Inuit and work to enhance communications, build capacity and ultimately, assist Inuit families", stated Lamoureux. He added, "As a Métis from Manitoba, I recognize the significant importance and value these programs and services provide. I'm eager to bring my experience working with Inuit, First Nations and Métis in my new role at T.I."

T.I. Executive Director Jason LeBlanc said, "Now, more than ever, it is essential to be great communicators to ensure outreach to our communities and strategic partners and advocate more broadly on behalf of the urban Inuit community. We're very excited to bring Joël's communications expertise and diverse skills to our team. His background in Indigenous cultural knowledge, media expertise and cutting edge communications leadership will increase our visibility, capacity, and ability to further provide positive change for our community."

Tungasuvvingat Inuit is a registered, charitable, not-for-profit organization, offering more than 20 highly integrated, front-line services. The agency is the only Inuit-specific service organization of its kind in urban Canada offering support through the entire life cycle.
